HONGKONG, SATURDAY, AUGUST 10, 1889.

The parable of the importunate widow who by the persistence of her entreaties, obtained redress for her wrongs from the unjust judge, has found a practical illustration in the action of Singapore with reference to the guns for the defence of the coaling stations. In our sister colony there has Goods per l'reussen undelivered after this grown up a public spirit such as is not date subject to the large of the known in Honokong. They have already known in Hongkong. They have already secured there a fairly liberal measure of municipal self-government; and, as always happens with every extension of political freedom, this self-government has been a means in itself of quickening still more the public life of the community. The colonists of the Straits have not been content, as have been the residents o Hongkong, to wait patiently with an Eastern placidity of temperament till the Imperial Government should think fit Hongkong and Shanghai Banking Cor- to implement the solemn promises had made. Like Hongkong, Singapore 3 p.m .- Meeting of Shareholders of the loyally set itself with energy to the construction of forts, but once these forts were completed, instead of thinking the teak finished, it turned on the Home Government, and by questions in Parliament, by representations to the Colonial Office, and even by advertisements in the newspapers, let it be known that there were two parties to the bargain, and that, having as a colony done its fair share, it would give the Home authorities no rest until their part of the contract was fulfilled. The result is that our neighbours have already received two 9.2-inch guns, will shortly, receive three more of the same class and are definitely promised two 10-inch guns call alongside any vessel hoisting code by the end of the year. Hongkong has pennant C., to convey men ashore to 11 received no large guns, and as to when they a. m. service at St. Peter's Seamen's Church, may be expected, the local Government returning about 12 30, knows nothing. We have grown, weary A Pouce Court frequenter was observed pointing out the shameful breach of pro- to-day passing opium to a prisoner in the mise on the part of the Imperial author dock, and was promptly fined two dollars. rities. Our forts were fin shed two years ago, and good forts they are, but what use are they without good guns? We know the Home people are busy fitting out the navy, the supply of guns to which was also far in arrears; and we can well understand BEFORE Mr Wodehouse in the Police Court that as long as we assume the attitude of to-day, a coolie from West Point charged patient forbearance they will naturally at- another coolie with theft. The charge, it tend to the most clament first. But is appeared from the evidence, was the result. this Eastern indifferentism a good policy 1. of a quarrel between the two men and was We do not wish to be alarmists, but the entirely without foundation. In such an eventuality, were our fleet not at hand, we fear that our old guns and the small six-inchersthe only new ones received-would make but a feeble protest against the play of powerful ironclad. Of course, we cannot suppose that we would be deserted by the fleet, but as the fleet could not defend Hongkong and strike at any of the enemy's thus give us an advantage which enables posts at the same time, the result of our weakness would seriously cripple the action

A great deal has been said recently about improving our small Volunteer corps, and number of ambitious projects were mooted As we have said before, there are not the elements in this Colony for a large Volunteer force, nor for the formation of many corps with different functions. A small body of fifty or sixty men, with a special function, be it either the working of Maxim guns or artillery, might be rendered as the Garrison. But what inducement is there for men to engage 1 this service when they find the Home authorities so remiss in the matters which most concern our security t What benefit is the addition of fifty or sixty men to us if there are nonbut obsolete guns in our forts? Let th Imperial Government do its duty, and we have no doubt that when the hour of peril comes there will be willing hands to turn our means of defence to the very best use. Meantime we must prove to the authorities in England that we are not asleep, that we have not paid for forts to see them empty; and, if the local Government cannot be roused to the sense of its duty in this matter, the residents themselves should follow the example of their brethren in Singapore and adopt the role of the importu-

The idea of a chair coolin agency, as set forth in a circular which we give in another column, has much to recommend it. The coolie is rather a perverse mortal to deal with, and, if the Agency can succeed in lessening the domestic cares which he causes, it will do a good work. The scheme, wesuppose, is not put forward by Mr Mitchell Innes in his official capacity, but he says that the management would, at any rate at the beginning, be under his supervision as Registrar General; and we imagine his department would always be willing to give its services in the settlement of small disputes. There are many small differences with coolies which it is irksome to bring before the Supreme Court, and which could easily be sattled by such an agency having at its back the department of the Profestor of Chinese. The Agency would thus perform the work which it was sought to accomplish under the Registration of Servants Act, and, not being hampered by red-tape restrictions, would have a greater chance of efficient as to be of considerable service to success. The experiment is certainly worth trying. At present residents are to some extent at the mercy of the coolie and his guild, and are subject to the boycotting peculiar to the class. If the Agency can deliver us from this petty yranny it will have the support of the whole European community. Some improvement might perhaps be made in the conditions of service, and the experience of residents may enable them to offer suggestions to Mr Mitchell Innes. The function of the chair-coolie must of course differ in different households. In many houses the outside work is heavy, and in these cases, very little inside work can be demanded, such work being generally performed by a house-coolie. In other cases the carrying work may not be heavy, and the coolie would be expected to do all such household work as is not done by the boy. The latter part of condition 6 might therefore be altered to read: And to do such house work as is not done by the boy or house coolie. Nothing s said in the circular as to how the manager of the Agency is to recoup himself for his trouble. The natural supposition is that he will deduct a small commission from the coolies in paying them their wages. Care would therefore have to be taken, if he obtained a sort of monopoly, that he did not squeeze the coolies too much. Doubtless the Registrar General, whether the Agency was directly under his supervision or not would manage to control the menager's actions as far as this goes.

The club which is said to have been looted by this gentleman and his friends is a new one and is situated in the gay locality of West Point, where it supplies a long felt want in connection with the study of history. When it was brought out in connection with some recent cases that acveral hundreds of these institutions flourished in the Colony, many people doubtless regarded the fact as a surprising one. TREATY revision is not knocked on the head in Japan. One section is strongly against it, but the Government seem to be pushing the matter forward. The Japan Gazette gays :-- Russia, we are told, will shortly follow the suit of the United States, Germany and Mexico, by signing the now treaty with Japan. The Nippon says the step was to have been taken ere this but negotiations were delayed a few days owing to the difficulty of communication with the Russian Government. Another communi cation containing the full text of the terms of the treaty is awaited before the final atep is taken.

And Sham-Shemaghi behind the curtain El Imparcial. Hear what I think respecting the same: I lived with the old man fifty years : we sought for happiness and found it not. But now, within a year, and since nothing is left to us at all, and as we have to serve strangers-now we have found true happiness and want no other.' Then were all the guests astonished, and also the host with them. The latter arose and withdrew the curtain that they might Knowledge. see the old woman. But Sham-Shemaghi stood there with folded hands and looked at her old man and the latter smiled. And Les Missiones Catholiques. she proceeded:

half a hundred years we sought for happiness, but found it nowhere as long as we were rich. Nothing is now left to us, we live with the servants, and have found so much joy that we need no other at all."

rich we had not an hour of rest, could not speak with each other, could not think of our souls nor pray to God, we had so many cares. When guests came to visit us we sad to see us here thus, and to think on thy took much pains to entertain them sumptuously, and to give them goodly presents that after they were gone they should not speak ill of us After the guests had departed we had the servants to see after-who lived too slothfully and neglected their work; we had lest the wolves devour the calves and the fold lest thieves get among the flocks and hords souls and time to pray. Fifty long years we sought for happiness, and have only found it now. The guests began to laugh, and Ilyas said: Laugh not, my brothers, for this is no jest, but the life of man. he piness P That I will tell thee. When we were to keep our eyes ever open that our property be not wasted and destroyed-we had to scold and sin. Then we were in dread and drive them away. If we lay down to sleep we feared that the sheep might crush the young lambs, and so arose and went to any Debt contracted by the Officers or the barns to care for them. Scarce was the Crew of the following Vessels, during tending of the young finished when the new care began how we were to provide hay for the winter. And withal there were disputes between me and the old man. He said : 'It must be so.' I said : 'Bo, and harsh words were there, and no peace—but
